Analysis and Comparison:

When using a mobile app I was very in control of what was going to happen next. For something to happen I had to change the view of the screen with my fingers. However when I was outside observing these different public locations over a period of 20 minutes the changes that happened were not in my control at all. People were moving and going about their day using this public space that I was a part of but still didn't have a significant control over. Looking at my Instagram made my world seem so small, literally at my control. However as I was walking around the prudential and observing the people, I realized that my existence wasn't significant to their lives.
